

Determining Human Relations with Aliens

George LoBuono, M.A.

Abstract

The US government's first direct, face-to-face contact with aliens occurred decades ago, when grayish skinned human-alien hybrids crashed near a New Mexico airbase. After the US military concluded that the aliens probably had some human genetic composition in them, US officials scrambled to develop safeguards against a stealth intervention on this planet by aliens of unknown origin. The intrusion of aliens with advanced technology and capabilities occurred at the outset of the Cold War, which compelled Truman's government to guard information about aliens as a military secret. For over four years, Truman had direct control of the US government's alien-related programs. However, in 1953 President Eisenhower let Nelson Rockefeller re-design executive security structures. Rockefeller ended elected official control of alien-related programs, a move that Eisenhower later regretted. Multiple former official witnesses say that within months, aliens were allowed basing rights on the Nellis Air Force range. Subsequent secrecy of alien-related programs allowed crime to proliferate within them, unchecked by rigorous public oversight. As a result, early human relations with aliens were largely determined by the Roswell Grays' alignment of aliens, rather than humans. Questions were raised about the intentions and material ambitions of such aliens. Under the circumstances, the situation could only be corrected through exposure and independent human investigation of aliens and alien interactions.

Introduction

Early human contacts with aliens tended to be very one-sided. Using advanced science and technology, aliens chose the terms of the interactions and were able to limit and control information flow. Humans couldn't understand what was happening, let alone compete with aliens. Lacking adequate science, humans tended to think that alien contact was a revelation from God, a strange angelic kind of interaction. But when live, in-the-flesh aliens fell out of the sky near a US nuclear bomber base, things began to change.

In 1947 the bodies of four short, Gray-skinned aliens and their wing-shaped craft were recovered near Roswell, NM by the US military and were kept for scientific study.¹ A fifth alien reportedly survived and later communicated--telepathically--with military investigators.² Stunned by the appearance of aliens who had advanced knowledge about human affairs, the Army worked overtime to study the Roswell aliens and their science. Just two years after Hiroshima, US officials feared the aliens might be hostile or have designs on this planet. So, discussion about aliens proceeded in extreme secrecy. As Eisenhower National Security Council staff member Col. Philip Corso wrote, "From day 1, the army treated its retrieval of the (Roswell) debris as if it were an operation conducted in a wartime theater under battle conditions."³ Corso wasn't the only witness to Roswell aliens. Dozens of first-hand witnesses, including military brass, have admitted that they saw dead and wounded aliens or the alien craft that crashed near Roswell.

Under the circumstances, strict defense considerations were understandable. However, the secrecy of alien-related programs prevented competent public analysis of what, on the surface, appeared to be an alien intervention into human affairs. President Truman was kept apprised of developments, but in 1953 when Eisenhower got in, corporate manipulators removed US presidents and other elected officials from active control of alien-related programs.⁴ Soon, the secret programs were rife with corruption, and some potential whistleblowers were reportedly murdered before they could speak. It was a recipe for disaster.

Early Elected Official Control of Alien-related Programs

Although we now know more about aliens due to reports by direct witnesses, in 1947--just two years after Hiroshima, fear and defensiveness were the order of the day. Col. Corso, who later served on Eisenhower's White House National Security Council staff, summed up the Army's feelings about the crash at Roswell:

“We didn't know what the inhabitants of these craft wanted, but we had to assume from their behavior, especially their interventions in the lives of human beings and the reported cattle mutilations, that they could be potential enemies. That meant that we were facing a far superior power with weapons capable of obliterating us.”⁵

It wasn't a hostile assumption. Instead, the incursion of alien technology that humans couldn't match caused fear and wariness in the US government. To have manufactured and serviced alien vehicles would have required a large, possibly burgeoning industrial structure. That meant mining and the use of non-renewable materials, security to prevent potentially competing aliens from taking their resources, and a large, possibly repressive government. But wherever they came from, whatever their intentions, aliens had arrived and they knew more about humans than humans knew about them.

In a preliminary analysis, Army Gen. Nathan Twining showed President Truman detailed photos and told him about the strange alien technology. Army scientists couldn't find an engine or power unit in the Roswell alien craft. Stranger still, as Corso noted, Army doctors examined the dead aliens and did “autopsy reports that suggested they were too human; they had to be related to our species in some way.”⁶ In other words, aliens had created what appeared to be human-alien hybrids. Had they made others that looked more human, and if so, what were the aliens planning to do with such hybrids?

That first, unexpected contact provoked a major crisis in US government. Aliens were directly intervening in human affairs, buzzing a nuclear bomber base and either taking humans or human reproductive material to create human-alien hybrids. They hadn't asked permission. Instead, they were trying to hide it all. According to Col. Corso, who said he worked on a Pentagon plan to copy technology from the Roswell wreckage, Pentagon officials grew more concerned about an alien incursion than they feared the threat of the Soviet Union. Corso wrote that part of the reason for a nuclear weapons buildup in subsequent years was to amass the ability to defeat an alien landing and occupation scenario. Later, Corso learned that Soviet dictator Josef Stalin heard about the Roswell crash. It was front-page news in the Roswell Daily Record and was featured on ABC radio news--until the Army decided to put out a cover story to hide the fact. The Navy Pacific fleet commander's intelligence briefer, William Cooper, said the US briefed the Soviets and US allies about the aliens in order to maintain global security against possible incursions.⁷

Less than a month after Roswell, the National Security Act of 1947 was written. It separated the Air Force from the Army and created both the CIA and a National Security Council. Legislators were told the CIA would protect the nation, but they didn't anticipate the danger of unaccountable power, at the time. Although Congress was supposed to approve overall budgets for the CIA and the NSA, which was created on Nov. 4, 1952, the new agencies had secret budgets and owned businesses that operated without legislative control. As had happened under monarchies of the past, corruption began to threaten the rule of law in the United States.

Truman set up a working group to maintain secrecy and supervise study of the Roswell artifacts. Corso wrote that the group agreed to "allow disclosure of some of the most far-fetched information, whether true or not, because it would help create a climate of public attitude that would be able to accept the existence of extraterrestrial life without a general sense of panic." Gen. Twining said, "It will be a case where the cover-up is the disclosure and the disclosure is the cover-up. Deny everything, but let the public sentiment take its course. Let skepticism do our work for us until the truth becomes common acceptance."⁸

It was a reasonable policy, given the fact that advanced alien technology had recently dropped out of the sky near the only nuclear bomber base on US soil. The president would monitor the project, and the public would gradually be allowed to learn about it.

Direct, face-to-face contact with aliens near Roswell led to a defensive mobilization and at least some sub-rosa skirmishes with aliens. As a result, the US military worked to reverse-engineer alien technology in order to be able to match it. Leading scientists were allowed to analyze the Roswell artifacts if they swore to secrecy. Their early analyses were impressive. They suggested that the Roswell craft used a kind of Tesla technology featuring something like the Biefeld-Brown effect, which had been discovered decades earlier.⁹ Early findings were only preliminary, but continued research led to the use and misuse of strange, new technologies. Given that the Roswell craft had crashed while buzzing the sole US nuclear bomber base, human use of alien technology for weapons purposes may have provided a convenient excuse for more aggressive intervention, here, by the Roswell Grays' larger alignment of aliens.

July 1952 Washington UFO Flyover

If Gray-hybrid aliens had been buzzing the Roswell air base in order to monitor nuclear weapons staging, their loss of greatly more advanced technology near the base would have been a major concern. Given their ability to monitor human governments, did they do anything to influence the human response to technology that might change the course of human history? There's evidence to suggest they did. Five years after Roswell, in July of 1952, the Washington Post, the New York Times and other newspapers printed stories and photos of unidentified, saucer-like craft swarming over Washington DC near the White House (photo above).¹⁰ Their appearance may have been meant as a message to Truman that US security policy, post-Roswell, was considered inimical to such aliens.

And what had those same aliens been doing during the five long years from 1947 until 1952, when Truman sat, wondering, in the White House while an alien squadron buzzed the nation's capital? Given their penchant for intervention, wouldn't they have tried to limit human reaction to their incursion, and, if necessary, prevent further disclosure until some future time when they could complete their mission on terms that were more favorable to them?

The Rockefeller Coup – A Crime Regime Takes Over

According to military whistleblowers like Philip Corso and William Cooper, the Roswell Grays' alignment tried to get the US government to permit their intervention here, but the US military felt they were too aggressive and intrusive to be trusted. That didn't stop the aliens. In 1953, President Eisenhower let Nelson Rockefeller re-design executive department security structures. Much to Eisenhower's dismay, the Rockefeller brothers removed US presidents from control of alien-related programs.¹¹ Michael Salla, PhD explains what happened:

The Special Studies Group/PI-40 formed under Eisenhower held their first meetings at Quantico Marine Base in Virginia and its 35 members were drawn exclusively from the Council of Foreign Relations. The Study Group had two directors, Henry Kissinger and Zbigniew Brzezinski, and consisted of prominent individuals, including Dr Edward Teller, Paul Nitze, David Rockefeller, and McGeorge Bundy (later Kennedy's Special Assistant for Foreign Affairs). According to (William) Cooper, the Rockefellers built a lavish retreat for the Study Group in an exclusive area in Maryland.¹²

By drawing exclusively from the Rockefeller-controlled Council on Foreign Relations to form the PI-40 group, which controlled alien-related programs, Rockefellers were stealing control of the human future from elected leadership, unknown to the general public. And by building a lush retreat for the PI-40 group, Rockefellers were deepening their influence over alien-related programs. Brig. Gen. Steven Lovekin, who worked in Eisenhower's White House, testified that Eisenhower felt betrayed.¹³ The president and other elected officials had been pushed aside by a family known for its investments in Nazi Germany and other brutal crimes against humanity. Nelson Rockefeller then maneuvered himself into a role as Eisenhower's coordinator for the CIA, plus a role in a secret planning group that would attend to clandestine dirty work without letting Eisenhower know about it.¹⁴ But why were Rockefellers so eager to take control of alien issues away from US presidents, thus making subsequent human-alien interactions secret?

Michael Salla notes that "In December 1953, the Joint Chiefs of Staff issued Army-Navy-Air Force publication 146 that made the unauthorized release of information concerning UFOs a crime under the Espionage Act, punishable by up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine."¹⁵ In other words, not only had elected officials been shut out of alien-related programs; now it was a major crime to tell both legislators and the public what the government knew about aliens and their craft. It was a major coup of an unprecedented sort, and it set the stage for the most bizarre development in all of US history: direct basing of aliens on US soil.

Aliens on US bases – an Occupation Phase

Career Airman Charles Hall writes that he witnessed how Air Force brass condoned the presence of "Tall White" aliens who were given a small base and supplies in the southeast corner of the Nellis Air Force range starting in 1954, or perhaps earlier.¹⁶ Clifford Stone, Steven Wilson, and Michael Wolf all stated that they saw aliens working inside US bases during their military careers.¹⁷ In addition, Army Sgt. Robert Dean says he saw a secret NATO document that said senior political and military leaders had mixed with human-looking aliens who could blend into a human crowd, unnoticed. Dean said the NATO command feared such aliens could infiltrate high public positions without being detected, a suspicion that Col. Corso said haunted the Pentagon.¹⁸ More recently, computer hacker Gary McKinnon

Tall White adult and child depicted claimed to have viewed internal US military documents about "non-terrestrial officers" and "fleet-to-fleet transfers."¹⁹ Adding to suspicions, the US government is prosecuting McKinnon for violating its secrecy. Meanwhile, McKinnon's story is like that of Clark McClelland, who worked on NASA's space shuttle program until 1992. McClelland formally stated that he saw live video feed of an 8-9 ft. tall non-human working alongside two human astronauts in the Space Shuttle's open bay while the alien's wing-shaped craft hovered nearby.²⁰ The alien craft, seen at www.stargatechronicles.com/images/shuttle_alien.jpg, was similar in design to the Roswell aliens' craft.

How did the US go from suspecting a stealth alien colonization attempt here, to direct joint basing of such aliens on federal properties? The Rockefeller coup appears to have spearheaded the effort. The Roswell Grays' alignment may have feared that Eisenhower, the Supreme Allied Commander during World War II, would continue direct presidential control and veto over alien-related programs. Evidence suggests that the Roswell Grays' alignment may have gone behind US presidents' backs to deal directly with black budget racketeers like the Rockefellers, who convinced Air Force brass that they would profit by playing along with such aliens. Apparently, the idea was to give such humans certain kinds of technology in order supplant independent human initiative and foster dependency.²¹

Navy intelligence officer William Cooper, who briefed the Pacific Fleet commander as part of his duties, stated that while in the Navy he saw classified papers saying that in 1954 a taller version of the Gray aliens had landed at Holloman Air Force Base to initiate talks with the US military--presumably Air Force generals.²² The US Air Force appears to have been the easiest route of approach for the aliens. In part due to Du Pont and Rockefeller family ownership of key aviation interests, an Air Force faction prioritized profit and technology over national security. DuPonts owned much of Boeing, Rockwell-North American, and through GM later gained control of Hughes Aerospace; a Rockefeller invested early in Lockheed.²³ The Navy and the Army appear to have been more cautious, at that time.

Some months later, President Eisenhower reportedly pretended to visit a dentist but went to Edwards Air Force base near Palm Springs, CA. William Cooper alleged that Eisenhower met there with aliens of the Gray alignment.²⁴ CSETI Disclosure Project witness Don Phillips, a former Air Force and Skunkworks employee, also read documents about the 1954 meeting.²⁵ A tentative agreement was reportedly signed that allowed the aliens to continue abducting and implanting humans—as long as they told the US military which humans were targeted (and the targets would have no memory of the events). Alleged high-level whistleblower Michael Wolf also mentioned the agreement. Cooper suggested that under duress, Eisenhower permitted two bases to be built for the aliens, one on Nevada’s Nellis Air Force Range, the other in New Mexico.²⁶ Eisenhower may have been told that if bases weren’t granted, the aliens might work with the Soviets, instead. However, unless he was pressured and deceived by men like Rockefeller, it’s hard to imagine a man like Eisenhower conceding bases to an alien occupier.

Cover of William Cooper’s Behold a Pale Horse

Were Roswell Gray-related aliens trying to front-load early human contacts in order to either dominate or pre-empt our relations with alien neighbors? Cooper said that by 1955--one year later, Eisenhower had evidence the aliens had broken the agreement. Apparently, alien intrusions and abductions of humans far exceeded expected proportions. Subsequent work done by abduction researchers suggested that humans have been abducted and used for purposes of what appears to be a breeding program of some sort.²⁷ Cooper further alleged that the infiltration phase noted by Robert Dean and Col. Corso resulted in manipulation of secret societies and cults that worked against effective human government. *Cathy O’Brien’s first book expands on the subject, albeit in a different vernacular.

The Tall White aliens that airman Charles Hall says were ceded a small base on an Indian Springs, NV Air Force range circa 1954 (one year after the Rockefeller coup) reportedly have pale whitish skin, stringy white hair, and oversized eyes. Hall’s story is partly corroborated by three other airmen who served on the base.²⁸ Michael Wolf told researcher Chris Stoner that parts of a Gray alien craft that crashed in the ocean west of San Diego in 1941 were shipped to the same Indian Springs, NV air base. Charles Hall published four books about his encounters with the Tall Whites from 1965-1967, when he was stationed at Indian Springs. In writing that’s earnest and restrained, Hall notes that Tall Whites had been allowed on the base since 1954, or perhaps earlier. A Las Vegas Review Journal article stated that three and a half years after the Roswell crash, in January of 1951, the small, secondary Indian Springs base announced it was spending $300 million to build base housing.²⁹ According to the MeasuringWorth website calculator, $300 million in 1951 was equivalent to $2.4 billion in 2008. The question is, why would a small, diversionary airfield like Indian Springs spend so much to build housing?

Charles Hall reports that the Air Force provided Tall Whites with excavated living quarters and a large hangar that housed the 350 foot-long interstellar craft used to ferry Tall Whites between their place of origin and the Indian Springs base. Hall was never told where Tall Whites came from, originally, but he heard that they may have an outpost near the star Arcturus. Hall says the Tall Whites were coldly business-like and prone to violence when they felt threatened. They carried pencil-shaped devices with various settings that could be used to stun, cause pain, or kill a human. The estimated 200-300 Tall Whites on the base were apparently organized in terms of a military hierarchy. The Air Force reportedly allowed Tall Whites to kill enlisted airmen who frightened them, even though enlisted men weren't briefed about the presence of Tall Whites on the range. Once, for no apparent reason a Tall White attacked Hall, causing a deep wound in his neck and partial paralysis. Hall said the only way to stop the flow of blood and survive was to press his neck against sandy soil. As Hall lay bleeding, he heard a Tall White remark that he might survive, but no help was provided.³⁰

Worse yet was the behavior of a Tall White who was reportedly climbing the steps of a government building in Washington DC to meet with a presumably limited number of US legislators. Hall said a CIA guard tried to help a Tall White female up the stairs at the Congressional building, but the guard accidentally hurt the Tall White female, who threatened the CIA guard and he had to beg her to spare his life. The female reportedly threatened to kill him with a pencil-like device, right there, on the stairs. The Tall Whites' arrogance mirrors the behavior of Tall Grays that human abductees have seen ordering shorter Grays around on alien spacecraft. For that reason, some analysts suspect that Tall Whites are affiliated with the Gray alignment. Hall is certain that ranking Air Force brass provided support for the Tall Whites. A four star Air Force general from the Pentagon regularly met with and gave the Tall Whites whatever they needed, apparently in exchange for limited technological help. Hall saw Air Force generals return from distant, hours-long trips with Tall

Whites on their antigravity craft. Hall says, “When the USAF Generals got off the craft they were laughing like they had just come back from the world’s best amusement park.”³¹

Short Gray ET

But who are the Tall Whites and where did they come from—what are their origins? Hall suggests that Air Force generals thought the Tall Whites were near-enemies of the Grays. Hall: “I am quite certain that the Tall Whites and the Short Greys hate each other. I am quite certain that the Tall Whites would never permit the Short Greys to come anywhere near their base areas or near to their housing areas or anywhere that their children might be playing, etc.”³² But what is Hall’s basis for that assumption? I asked him, and he replied, “I was with the Tall Whites for over two years. Various remarks were made, and in particular, the Teacher (a Tall White) made the point quite clear to me.”³³

Like the Roswell aliens, Tall Whites look too much like humans. They appear to be a genetically designed hybrid race placed here for a particular reason. Hall even says he saw a Tall White who wore sunglasses and was able to mix in with a Nevada casino crowd.

At present, the human catalogue of aliens shows that aliens evolve from different animal species on planets of different sizes under varying conditions. Aliens reportedly tend to be bipedal but have varying skin color, eye shape, skin characteristics and numbers of fingers. In other words, they look very alien. So, Tall Whites, who have no independent story about their evolution, may have been created by a group of aliens that took humans from this planet, then hybridized them to create a headstrong, Tall White version. The Roswell Grays’ alignment has the strongest motives for having created Tall Whites. The fact that Tall Whites sometimes treat humans like cattle and try to train humans to be fearful and submissive further suggests that Tall Whites may be a creation of the Grays’ alignment, which reportedly has a long history of human abductions. Gray alignment aliens may think that they can dribble their technology into human hands, then foster a secretive regime devoted to protecting that technology, irrespective of the human cost.

Hall says Tall Whites didn’t share their secrets about antigravity technology but did tell Air Force brass how to create a nuclear thruster device. Ironically, former Air Force intelligence officer and defense contractor Edgar Rothschild Fouche suggests that aliens either gave or lost nuclear thruster technology to the US military, which was then used on a triangle shaped craft called the TR-3B.³⁴ For his part, Charles Hall saw abundant evidence that Air Force officials provided Tall Whites with supplies and parts used to build small, oblong-shaped scout craft. One investigator living in the Las Vegas area told me he saw an oblong-shaped scout craft flying when he camped near Indian Springs during recent years.³⁵

In sum, in 1954--just one year after the Rockefeller coup, Tall Whites may have begun to trade aviation technology to Rockefeller-related aviation interests, technology that went to a newly separate Air Force. Tall Whites were allowed a base on US soil under what appear to have been false pretenses: they pretended to be anti-Gray. And if that's the case, then Tall Whites may be a prong of the Gray alignment that was used to gain the confidence of, then deeper penetration into, US defense circles. It was a step that was unprecedented in human history. In a matter of months, US presidents had been removed from direct, full control of alien-related programs, a law had been created to harshly prosecute anyone who might tell a president about such programs, and finally, aliens were reportedly being based on US soil.

Col. Corso's writings suggest that the Army was leery of such arrangements. Corso wrote: "Those of us in the military who knew what was happening also felt that we could be experiencing an invasion that was more of an infiltration.... These creatures weren't benevolent alien beings who had come to enlighten human beings." Instead, Corso said his colleagues thought the aliens were coldly calculating, "cloned biological entities who were harvesting biological specimens on Earth for their own experimentation.... We had negotiated a kind of surrender with them as long as we couldn't fight them. They dictated the terms because they knew what we most feared was disclosure."³⁶ In other words, US officials feared what might happen if the Gray alignment made itself known before the public was adequately informed about aliens. Were US officials worried about public fear, or public affinity for such aliens? Readers should remember that aliens outside of the Grays' alignment have largely refrained from open intervention here. Corso's statement doesn't mean that US officials think all aliens have designs on this planet.

In short, in early US policy and in future human-alien relations, a distinction must be made between issues involving the Roswell Grays' alignment and policy regarding other aliens. The crash at Roswell alerted humans to a direct intervention, here, by what journalist Phillip Krapf alleges are self-described alien colonizers. Although we have a lot to learn from aliens, when it comes to infiltration and manipulation of human affairs we need to be careful. Numerous human reports about Grays indicate that the Grays' home planet was somehow ruined during an intervention there, an intervention by aliens that Grays now work with.³⁷ So the question must be raised: do such colonizers prioritize their resource needs over the ecology of target planets?

If, as science suggests, the universe contains many intelligent populations, wouldn't competing aliens respond to the intervention, here, of a materially motivated Gray alignment? A variety of human accounts suggest that other aliens have monitored the situation, perhaps thinking that the challenges posed by Gray alignment excess will provoke humankind to be more competent and refined in our critique of aliens.³⁸

About the Author: After doing graduate study that concentrated on the underside of US history, George LoBuono reported for the Suttertown News in Sacramento, then covered the 1993 presidential elections in Indonesia for Pacifica radio network and investigated deep politics and crime within black budget agencies. In 1995, he began to research alien-related programs in the US government. He has worked on several political campaigns and has done activist work on anti-nuclear and peace/justice issues. He writes on various topics and serves as a board member of the Coalition of Concerned Legal Professionals, a free legal clinic in Sacramento, CA.

Bob Lazar claims to have seen a report about the fuel, also. However, those items would only have been given to the US after the Rockefeller coup and after, as William Cooper reported, the US government had retrieved a number of alien disks downed by the use of high power radar and other means. Gray alignment cession of such technology suggests possible desperation or fear about their intervention being thwarted by human possession of advanced technology.

Apollo scientist David Adair said he saw a similar crystal in a bus-sized alien reactor in an underground Nellis Air Force base hangar when he was 17 years old.
